

The Art of Intervention

Ringvorlesung des Departement Gesellschaftswissenschaften im Rahmen der Ausstellung „Martha Rosler & Hito Steyerl. War Games“

Kann politische und gesellschaftskritische Kunst „überleben“?, fragt Martha Rosler.

Die Veranstaltungsreihe The Art of Intervention nimmt diese Frage als Impuls, um sich mit Beiträgen aus Kunst und Kultur zu gegenwärtigen Debatten über multiple Krisen des neoliberalen, globalen Kapitalismus, von Migrationsbewegungen und wieder aufflammenden Nationalismen auseinanderzusetzen. Angesichts zunehmender Angriffe auf und Einschränkungen von kritischen Positionen, und die Verspottung politisch gesinnter Kunst, Geistes- und Sozialwissenschaften als überflüssige Ideologie, erkunden wir den radikalen Einfluss und die Möglichkeiten von Kunst und Kultur in Verbindung mit kritischem Denken und politischer Mobilisierung.

Rethinking Debates on Freedom of the Arts and its Limits

Much has been publicized about the recent crackdown on freedom of expression in Turkey. What is often overlooked, however, is how censorship works, and how it has been changing. Based on cases studies collected for more than a decade, this presentation situates recent developments in Turkey in the wider European context faced with challenges to free expression under the conditions of the “global war on terror,” mass surveillance and rising right-wing politics. Detailing the modalities of censorship and the different actors involved in it, the presentation will outline how freedom of the arts is legally and discursively circumscribed by official memory regimes and examine artistic strategies that push back against censorship.

Banu Karaca, an anthropologist by training, is currently a Mercator-IPC Fellow at the Istanbul

Policy Center at Sabanci University. Her recent and forthcoming publications examine the entrenchment of art in state violence, cultural policy and museum politics, freedom of expression in the arts, the visualization of gendered memories of war and political violence, and visual literacy. She is the co-founder of Siyah Bant, a research platform that documents censorship in the arts and continues her research on how lost, dispossessed, and misattributed artworks shape the practice of writing art history in Turkey.

Unbuilding Gender: Trans* Anarchitectures In and Beyond the Work of Gordon Matta-Clark

In this present talk, I look towards anarchitectural practices of unmaking as promulgated by the American artist Gordon Matta-Clark (1943–1978) and I link the ideas of unbuilding and creative destruction that characterize his work to develop a queer concept of anarchitecture focused upon the trans* body. The concept of “anarchitecture” is attributed mainly to Matta-Clark, whose inventive site-specific cuts into abandoned buildings demonstrated an approach to the concept of home and to the market system of real estate that was anarchistic, creatively destructive, and full of queer promise. Of course, this is not to say that Matta-Clark nor any of the participants in the Anarchitecture Group that he helped to found in downtown Manhattan in 1973 and '74 would have understood their work in this sense. Rather, we might take up the challenge offered by Matta-Clark’s anarchitectural projects, in order to spin contemporary conversations about queer and trans* politics away from notions of respectability and inclusion and towards an anti-political orientation to unmaking a world within which queers and trans people, homeless people and immigrants are cast as problems for the neoliberal state.

Halberstam is currently working on a book titled WILD THING on queer anarchy, performance and protest culture, the visual representation of anarchy and the intersections between animality, the human and the environment.

Performing in public space at the time of identity claims and political resistances

Michèle Magema is a Congolese-French video, performance, and photography artist. She was born in Kinshasa, Democratic Republic of Congo in 1977. She emigrated to Paris, France in 1984, where she currently resides.

In 2002 she received her MA in fine arts from l'Ecole Nationale Supérieure d'Arts de Cergy. In addition to being a resident artist at Cité Internationale des Arts, she has participated in the Africa Remix Exhibition in Centre Pompidou. Her work has been exhibited in the Global Feminisms exhibition at the Brooklyn Museum and at the Hirshhorn Museum and Sculpture Garden.

One of her most well-known works is Oyé Oyé, (2004) a two-channel video installation, in which a woman (Magema) is shown marching in place on the left, while on the right historic footage of Zaire's Mobutu Sese Seko overseeing parades of Congolese cultural pride.

A key focus, for her, is articulating a permanent exchange between individual stories, collective memory and history.

Wer interveniert? Gedanken aus kunst/kultur_aktivistischer Perspektive

Ein Dialog zu Themen der Blackness, Un/Sichtbarkeit, Community, Kultur, Kunst und Kritik. Ausgehend von ihrem eigenen Engagement und Schwarz-/queer-feministischer Literatur sprechen Rahel El-Maawi und Sarah Owens über die Beweggründe für, sowie Möglichkeiten und Konsequenzen von einer intersektional agierenden kunst-/kultur_aktivistischen Arbeit. Dabei verschiebt sich der Blickwinkel von der Art der Intervention hin zu den Fragen, wer interveniert und wie diese Intervention durch gesellschaftspolitische Rahmenbedingungen unterstützt oder eingeschränkt wird.

El-Maawi, soziokulturelle Aktivistin u.a. bei Bla*Sh - dem Netzwerk Schwarzer* Frauen*, Lehrbeauftragte und Bewegungsforscherin, und Owens, Aktivistin bei Bla*Sh und Professorin für Visuelle Kommunikation, Zürich.

Die Ringvorlesung The Art of Intervention ist eine Kooperation des Departement Gesellschaftswissenschaften der Universität Basel, Kunstmuseum Basel Gegenwart und Swiss Center for Social Research.
